

POST CARD

Today I got to visit Rouen, and it might be my favourite so far!

This was Rollo's own capital! The King gave Rollo all of Normandy so the fighting would stop.

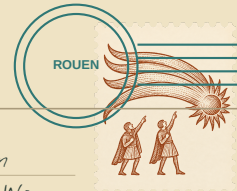

This morning I hiked in the forest outside of town and got to see some of those famous Normande cows!

This afternoon was the city proper, the cathedral and the famous half-timbered houses. The city was vibrant today with lots of people milling about.

All that walking around made me crave fast-food, the battered poultry from Kentucky. Tonight's dinner was a bit fancier, the Inn I'm staying at is famous for their snails!

With love,
Aunt Liv

FUN FACT

Rouen Cathedral holds the actual heart of Richard the Lionheart, King of England and Duke of Normandy. Its spire also once held a record of its own: at 151 metres (495 feet) it's the tallest church spire in France, and was briefly the tallest structure in the world in the late 19th century.
